4.2.2. Interrogative sentence

An interrogative sentence has a falling intonation if there is a morphological marker of the question. If didn't the answer, use rising intonation. If more or less know the answer and are looking for confirmation.,use fall- rising intonation. Interrogative sentences have two rules. The first Yes/no question, intonation rising. Any other question, intonation falling. The second W-H question requires falling intonation in the end of sentences. All the sentence have the same phenomena. The intonation of them are confusing to correct juncure failing and raising intonation. The students fail to determine the word that has falling intonation in W-H question and raising intonation in Yes-No question. Many students fail to determine which words that is stressed and unstressed.

4.3 Research Findings

The researcher displayed the data of students’ intonation variation in speaking English at students at VIII Grade Students of SMP HKBP Pardamean Medan.

Findings of this research are:

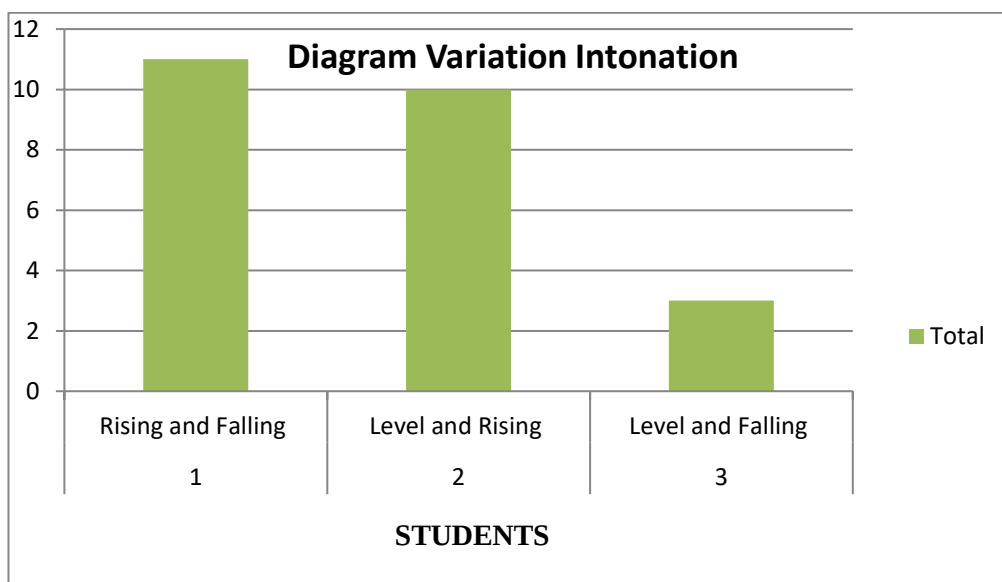

- a. Difficulty in using rising intonation for the first clause and falling intonation for the second clause in a compound sentence. This difficulty often occurred when the students are faced with combined intonation that exists in compound sentence. The rule is that the first clause is in rising intonation and the second one is in falling intonation. The students done both clauses are in falling intonation and sometimes there is no connection between these clauses.

- b. Difficulty in using falling intonation for wh question and rising intonation for yes-no question. The students use very often rising intonation in asking something by w-h question and falling intonation in asking question which requires answer of yes or no. They do not know in what type question rising or falling intonation should be used
- c. Difficulty in determining pitch and stress of a syllable. This is the very crucial difficulty of mastering correct intonation. The students have minimum knowledge about what words that have stress and high/low pitch. The effectiveness of an intonation depends of an intonation depends very much on the pitch and stress.

4.4 Discussions

Having analyzed the data, the findings are discussed to answer research questions proposed in the first chapter What are the difficult variation intonation used by the students' in speaking English? and the second research question What are the difficulties in pronouncing of intonation in speaking English?

The findings related to the first research question showed that the In studying, intonation is study how the pitch rises and falls and it is able to detect high pitch from a low pitch. The findings related to the first research question. The researcher adds three variation intonation of students in the table which done by the VII grade students of SMP HKBP Pardamean Medan.

Table 4.1 Diagram of Variation Intonation

The explanation about the diagram of variation intonation are:

1. Difficult Rising and Falling Intonation

Rising and falling intonation was the most difficulties which done by the students in the dialog. There are eleven sentences that are difficult to difficult variation intonation in the dialogue by students. The students could not emphasis intonation in the sentences. Difficult rising and falling was 11 or 45% in students.

2. Difficult Level and Rising Intonation

Level and rising intonation was the rather difficulties which done by the students in the dialogue on students. There are ten sentences that are difficult variation intonation in the dialogue by students. The students could not emphasis intonation in the sentences. Difficult level and rising intonation was 10 or 41% in students.

3. Difficult Level and Falling Intonation

Level and falling intonation was the least difficult which done by the students in the dialogue by students. There are three sentences that are difficult variation intonation in the dialogue by students. The students could not emphasis intonation in the sentences. Difficult level and rising intonation was 3 or 12% in students.

Learning intonation in English is very important because when someone conveys something a very clear intonation is needed in order to understand what is meant by what is conveyed. Currently, students' didn't know intonation in English texts students' lack of ability to read or write English. Teachers need to explain in detail about every pronunciation or intonation in English intonation in English text so that students are able to understand.
